Integrative Mental Health for the Pediatric Provider

1440 Multiversity • Scotts Valley, CA

This immersive, three-day course will cover common mental health issues that pediatric providers routinely face. Drawing from the related but distinct expertise of three faculty who have been teaching integrative medicine approaches to these conditions for more than a decade each, you will have the opportunity to learn about current approaches to treating neurodevelopmental disorders (autism and ADHD), mood disorders (anxiety and depression), and behavioral aspects of chronic pain through lectures, case discussions, and experiential demonstrations. Integrative approaches to these conditions will include mind-body techniques, nutrition and supplements, and coordinating care among medical and mental health providers.

This course, offered by the UCSF Osher Center for Integrative Medicine, is designed for general and subspecialty pediatricians, nurse practitioners, and physician assistants who are interested in employing the practice of evidence-based integrative medicine as it applies to the mental health of children and teens.

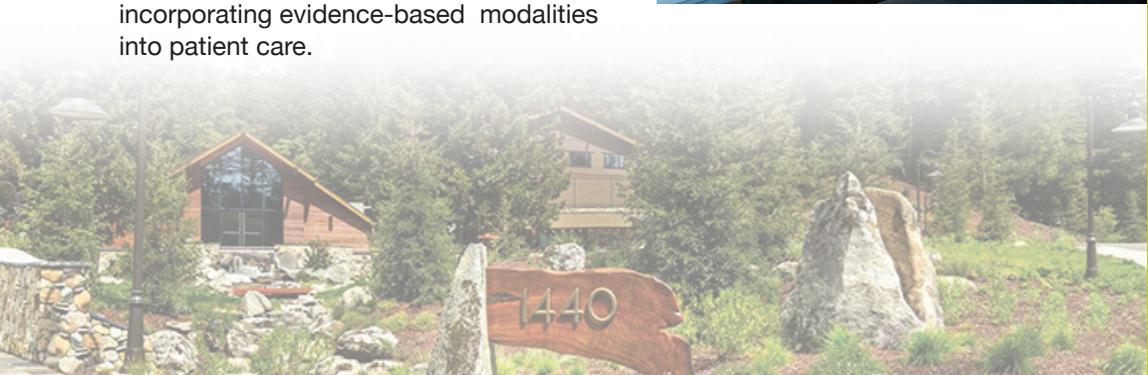

TARGET AUDIENCE

Target audience consists of general and subspecialty pediatricians as well as pediatric nurse practitioners and physician assistants.

OBJECTIVES

Upon completion of the activity, an attendee will be able to:

- Develop a knowledge base of integrative assessment models of a range of common pediatric mental health problems and evidence-based interventions;
- Develop an approach to critically assess the integrative medicine literature in these topic areas, achieve competency in evaluating these interventions, and be able to assess the efficacy and appropriateness of these interventions in particular clinical situations;
- Explain how to develop an integrative plan, incorporating evidence-based modalities into patient care.
